besides were we told concerning Miss Ponselle some time prior to her début as Norma, the exacting rôle which she had made her own at the Metropolitan and elsewhere.

Happily the danger of disappointment where so much is promised and expected was in this instance successfully averted. We found ourselves listening to a singer of altogether exceptional gifts—a singularly pure, rich, even voice of very individual quality, managed with unwonted skill, capable of a varied range of expression, and particularly beautiful in the lower registers. In Happily the danger of disappoint beautiful in the lower registers. In regard to sheer vocal attainment. nish a home in period furni-ture, thinking that it does not offer the comforts which modern styles do.

Another objection which is sometimes mentioned is, that the needs of present-day households are not met by the articlex made by cabinethal the property of the eighteenth century. For far as comfort is concerned, it is certain that many people would desire no easier seat than the Queen Anne armchairs with their broad wings such as are shown in our illustration. Of course these are not overstuffed, like some of the thoroughly modern sort, but they do seem to offer all the case that a person ahould want who is not sleeping.

Armchairs of the type pictured date from the early 1700's. There are later forms almost as desirable, such as the wing chairs and the so-called Martha Washington models, which came along in 1780-1790.

The most enthusiastic lover of antiques must admit that early couches, sofas or setteex have little to offer us in the way of ease, compared with the similar articles of present-day design. They are sometimes wholly lacking in upholstery, being softened for use by cushions liberally placed. These accessories seem to be quite enough for most occasions. At any chamber article. Perhaps we may draw from this the conclusion that anything similar to a couch was then thoughly out of place outside a chamber. The settees that appear in all the styles from 1650 on are obviously intended merely to seat several persons.

NORTHWEST of Chicago, out Barrington way, not far off the main roads, there is a bit of countryside that comes nearer to achieving the charm of Early Amerachieving the charm of Early Americana than perhaps anything west of the original 13 colonies. It has the flavor of the mellowed East, and to lend authenticity, as it were, a quaint old house that celebrated nearly 200 birthdays on Cape Cod. It has with-stood the rigors of dismantling, re-moval and reassembling and has taken root in the midst of this rolling-countryside where there are a num-ber of nice old places with splendid farms and fine gardens.

Near by, quite in keeping with the colonial spirit, is a white frame house situated at the foot of a knoll between an oak grove and an or-chard. A rock-and-water garden is in the foreground and, along the edge, a serpentine bed of glorious, colorful, giant zinnias. It is the Eustice country home, where the mistress played Aladdin in transforming a few old, tumble-down shacks into a gem of a place, charming in its simplicity.

With a patient carpenter to tear down, build, and rebuild according to her ideas, the transformation of the house was completed Next, she turned her attention to the chicken house which she saved from demolition under a storm of protest. Ap-proached by a winding stone stair-way flanked by hardy perennials, with striped awnings and boxes filled with flowering plants at the win-dows, the guest house is really the "pièce de resistance" of the place. furnished in colonial furniture, with flowered wall paper, hooked rugs, patchwork quilts and quaint bits of pottery, there is ample evidence that in the converting of the chicken house, Mrs. Eustice rubbed the lamp with extra vigor, for the hand of the Genii is apparent. One successful remodeling job led on to another, with a repressed desire to own a tea room. Besides, in the background there was an old, old house on the Dundee Road, at one end of their 1000-acre farm. So a partnership was formed and soon Mrs. Eustice and an old-time friend Mr. Hutchinson, were busy remodeling and enlarging the old farmhouse. The remodeling completed, the house furnished in antiques, quaint and interesting crockery, copper, brass and pewter to lend charm, and the tea room organized, the lady stepped out to leave the gentleman in charge.

There is a beauty and charm about the place which sets it entirely apart

MARKET OPINIONS

Inovements to acquire sound stocks, giv-ing particular attention to rails.

Livingston & Co., New York: More than the total of brokers' loans, the Street will be interested next week in the credit situation. If time money-rates continue to ease slightly, stocks will be able to advance again. In fact, we would consider any reaction that should develop at the present time as only a temporary setback. We believe there are a number of issues which will continue to advance in the next several

A generally strong tone has prevailed in the New York stock market this week. A considerable amount of fronti-taking developed from time to time but was offset by steady buying interest. Utilities failed to keep pace with the rest of the list, but this was due probably to the fact tha an important upswing had previously taken place in this class. Brokers' loans increased $227,000,000 this week, the rise being the second largest weekly gain on record.

being the second largest weekly gain on record.

Some irregularity in industrial shares was evident on the London Stock Exchange. Rubber shares were strong toward the close of the week, and buying of Columbia Graphophone and International Nickel was reported. After showing improvement early in the week, the Paris Bourse was adversely affected by political conditions. A selling waye Friday developed to considerable proportions.

The firmer tone noted on the Berlin Boerse at the beginning of this week was again evident at the close of the week's trading. Bear, attacks were made on Glazed Textiles and Polyphon shares, but mining shares were in demand, and led an upturn in the general list.

Milk Company, and the Sheffield Farms Company, In 1926 and 1927-19 additional companies were taken over, and in 1928 some 12 more were acquired, among them, being the General lee Cream Corporation, which serves ice cream in 1500 cities, and in 1927, showed sales of about $8,000,000. This expansion has proceeded apace in 1929, 14 companies having been merged into the National Dairy, the most important being Detroit Creamery Company, with annual sales of about $20,000,000.

Last year, National Dairy Products reported sales of $212,632,077, which compares with 1927 sales of $145,330,600, a gain of about 46, per cent. Sales were $134,549,919 in 1927, and $105,500,000,000, the gain in sales over 1928 would be better than 40 per cent. and assuming that the company maintains the same ratio between earnings and sales as in 1928, namely, 8 per cent, earnings of $21,000,000 would show a 50 per cent gain over the previous year. What the share earnings will be is a matter of conjecture, since the company is constantly issuing new stock in its policy of absorbing other concerns, but on the 4,208,995 shares now outstanding after the two-forone stock split, net should be equal to between $5.50 and $6 a share. It is fairly safe to say that any-dilution of capitalization due, to expansion will not affect per share earnings unforced in the stock issued to acquire them exceeds that of National Dairy itself.

Britain Has New Direction Finder

SPECIAL PROM MONITOR BUREAU

London NEW wireless direction finder Type D. F. M. 4, has been 'deeloped by the research department of the Marconi Company or use primarily on all classes of naval ships as a navigational instrument. Experience has shown that wineless direction finder, to meet aval requirements, must be capable of taking accurate bearings from continuous wave, interrupted connous wave, spark or telephone usmitters over a wide range of wavelengths.

The type D. F. M. 4 equipment comprises three units—the frame aerial, the radiogoniometer, and the tuner and amplifier. The frame aerial, one note-magnifier, one local oscillator generator, which can be sided as an additional note magnifier if required, and one coupling valve.

In order that the "sense" or bearings over the whole waveband of the receiver can be obtained with the use of only a short vertical aerial, a stage of value amplification using the coupling valve is employed for the vertical component.

The radio-goniometer is constructed as a separate unit which can be fixed any convenient position. Two calibrated scales from which the bearings are read are mounted on the face of the unit. The inner scale is fixed and bearings taken from this scale are relative to the center line of the ship. The outer scale can be rotated until the figure indicating the ship's true course its at the top of the day. inner scale, and then if the ship is steady on her course the bearings home receiver can tune in is brought read from the outer scale are true to the motorist, whether he is cruis-

Dear Editor:

Through the Mail Bag I have found several charming correspondents—10 in Germany, one in England, and two in the United States. I can truly say that I am very grateful for these friends. The Christian Science Monitor is in every way a wonderful newspaper. In that it is international, it is spreading thoughts of peace and brotherly love. And surely there is none more eager to accept the opportunities the Monitor offers through the Mail Bag than the younger generation.

Parity, Equality, Fraternity

THE American Secretary of State, Henry L. Stimson, has placed just and timely emphasis upon the doctrine of parity as a valuable means of achieving a naval reduction between Great Britain and the United States. His succinct comment will bear rereading:

The first step which people take when they are going to The first step which people take when they are going to shoot at each other is to try to outbuild each other in the strape of navies. The minute they agree not to outbuild each other they are taking one of the longest steps pos-sible toward bot having a war. That is why we are laying stress on the doctrine of parity.

In evaluating Mr. Stimson's statement it is essential to recognize that there is no contradiction between the doctrine of parity and the suggestion that the renewed Anglo-American negotiations should be based upon the mutual conviction that the two nations will never engage each other in war. To the contrary, parity s itself a recognition that the United States and Great Britain, by the faith that a new day has brought to them; have ruled out of the equation of Anglo-American relations all consideration of conflict. An equal navy can never be an instrument of aggression.

The Summer Institutes

UGUST will bring once again two of the A increasing number of college conferences for the discussion of public affairs. The Williamstown Institute of Politics, the oldest of these organizations, although itself only eight years old, meets in the charming New England town nestled in the heart of the Berkshires. Its program this year relates largely to disarmament, the tariff, reparations, and international results that may proceed from the establishment of the Labor Government in England. A very distinguished body of speakers has been provided. Probably few people other than the actual managers of these institutes appreciate the great difficulty of obtaining speakers with a good command of the English language and a proper knowledge of foreign affairs. Never since the first of the Williamstown institutes have the promoters of that organization been able to quite equal the program at that time. Never, of course, has there been available a speaker so thoroughly understanding at once foreign problems and the requirements of an American audience as did Lord Bryce. Nevertheless, there have been notable successors to him, and the program for this year, with such speakers as Professor Rappard of Geneva, André Siegfried of Paris, and Professor Gregory of London, offers-great promise of enlightenment to those who are fortunate enough to attend

The Institute of Public Affairs of the University of Virginia is held coincidentally with the meeting of Williamstown, beginning August 4. In the past it has concerned itself more with national than with international affairs. The program this year as announced touches problems of an international character only in the round table presided over by Dr. Clarence 14. Haring of Harvard, dealing with the Latin-American relations of the United States. But such topics as the country life of the Nation, the economic and industrial development of the South, democracy as operative in America, all ofter stimulating subjects for present-day dis-

Dr. H. A. Garfield, president of Williams College, and Bernard Baruch, who generously financed the first three sessions of the Institute of Politics, have every reason to look with satisfaction upon the way in which their conception has been accepted and followed in all sections of the country. The Pacific coast has an Institute of Politics, meeting alternately at Seattle and at Los Angeles. Dartmouth College last winter, through the agency of its Christian Association, conducted a not dissimilar series of political studies. A recent benefaction will enable Yale University to hold an institute during the academic year, and many lesser imitators and followers of the Williamstown model are from time to time announced. It does not detract at all from the seriousness of purpose and the usefulness of these gatherings that in addition to study they offer time for recreation, and add to political and economic discussion a very considerable measure of useful personal contacts and social relaxation.

No Dishes to Wash!

70MAN'S emancipation from dishwashing may be at hand! What greater boon can be bestowed upon the housewives of the world? Ever since society first took recognition of the desirability of using knives and forks 'nstead of fingers, dishwashing has been looked apon as a sordid activity from which women saw little hope of escape. Few and far between have been the women who have voiced a great and overpowering affection for this particular form of kitchen work.

And now the news is broadcast that an ultramodern apartment house has been designed and erected with a central dishwashing plant. In none of its kitchenettes are there any of the implements with which women have been wont to attack the awesome stacks of chinaware. The dishes, probably much in the same manner as the laundry, are gathered in a basket, sent to shining in ample time for the next meal. If one apartment house can perform such wonders others are likely to fall into line, and this may be but a step away from the organization of dishwashing plants in every community of smail

War Debts Demand a Calm View

ON THE broad question of international indebtedness as a result of the war, there is room for two, if not more, opinions; but on the desirability of French ratification of her debt accords there cannot be any dispute, and it would be unfortunate should a French parliamentary incident prove a misunderstanding. From every viewpoint the French Parliament would do well to lose no further time in accepting arrangements similar to those accepted by Great Britain and other debtor nations of Europe.

There is every reason to believe that before August 1 ratification will be an accomplished fact. The French Government is persuaded of its necessity, and a parliamentary majority is ready to support Raymond Poincaré, the Prime Minister, either by a straight vote or by according him the right to ratify by decree. Thus will France's financial rectitude, about which there has been much badly informed or malicious criticism, be vindicated.

France has never wished to evade its obliga tions, but it has wished to discuss them in the hope of a more favorable definition. Its main contention, the full implication of which the United States cannot admit but which is nevertheless not devoid of argumentative attractiveness, is that while the United States has a claim on France which is legally irrefutable, France has a still stronger claim, moral and legal, on

There is no direct link, but it is obvious that if Germany pays France, then France can without inconvenience pay the United States. If Germany does not pay France, then France's resources will be seriously strained in its effort to repay the United States:

This is a simple, logical proposition about the validity of which there should not be the smallest excitement, either in the United States or in France, It does not release France from its liabilities toward America, and no responsible Frenchman has argued that it does. On the contrary, it acknowledges the French debt and does not leave the tiniest loophole for escape in the event of Germany's fulfillment of its promises. It irrevocably binds France to furnish annuities to the United States. Default would be a disastrous breach of good faith, since France is receiving money for the specific purpose of paying the United States.

Against that aspect of the case, the United States has not the smallest reason to demur. It recognizes France and not Germany as its debtor, but it cannot be disagreeable to know that France will receive funds which will assure the payment of its debts. On this assumption, Owen D. Young and his colleagues worked in Paris. They safeguarded the interests of the United States as well as facilitated European affairs in providing that Germany should give France the wherewithal to reimburse the United

There arises, however, another hypothesis, namely, that Germany will some day cease pay-Will France be expected to continue them? If, in fact, France looks to Germany and Germany repudiates its debt or fails to foot the bill, will the United States press France?

It is always foolish to erect an hypothesis and transform it into a bogey. Temporary difficulties are already cared for in the Mellon accord, and France can obtain necessary delays. A permanent refusal to pay on the part of Germany would be caused either by recalcitrancy or incapacity. If it were pure recalcitrancy, Germany's political and commercial credit would suffer greatly, and as opinion hardened against Germany, sympathy would awaken for France. This hypothesis is almost unthinkable; but if it were realized, France would certainly be fairly dealt with. If, on the other hand, Germany's refusal were caused by incapacity, then a new plan would have to be evolved by an international committee, and if France had always demonstrated its willingness to pay in accordance with its means, it would be impossible not to listen to a French plea at the same time as a German plea.

That is the situation as it presents itself to the impartial eye. So-called safeguarding resolutions are superfluous, are excessive precautions, which, however, the French Parliament is free to take in a unilateral form. They cannot hurt anybody or commit anybody against his will. Incidents such as the appeal for the postponement of the maturity of the war stocks debt in order to allow more time for deliberation should not be magnified. They show only a rather regrettable parliamentary nervousness which prompts unthinking interferences with government plans.

They indicate that Parliament is afraid lest Germany should reject the Young report after the French have ratified their debt accord. Germany cannot reasonably reject the report, and if it did, obviously French ratification obtained on what would be tantamount to false pretences, or at least grave misunderstanding, would be subject to reconsideration.

There is no occasion for these French apprehensions and suspicions, but equally there is no occasion for American impatience. In a few weeks it is to be trusted that this protracted controversy will be settled to the satisfaction of everybody concerned, and a stumblingblock to world concord removed.

Reason Comes to Politics

DEASON has never played in politics its full and proper part. Historically, it has too often been dominated by emotion, and those statesmen who, like many of the early leaders in the French Revolution, overrated its influence, found out their mistake at the cost both of themselves and of the community. Some years ago, Graham Wallas showed how little conscious intellectual study of political and economic problems affected the polling at a parliamentary election, and how great was the influence of nonrational factors, such as the charm of the candidate's smile or his winning way of patting babies on the head. A recent cartoon in Punch showed two women standing in front the washing plant and returned clean and l of a poster bearing the monocled portrait of a candidate for Parliament. "I don't know what you are going to do about it," one of them was saying to the other, "but I'm going to vote for the chap with the monoplane in his eye." That is only too true a comment upon the quality of many an old-time voter.

The more astute of politicians in the past have recognized this trait, and those of the Disraelian school have played upon it with great personal success. But only one statesman of the front rank has consistently maintained that a political system is better based on emotion than on reason, and today Burke would find few people to agree with him on this point. It would rather be admitted that, as Alfred Zimmern says, "When politics become reasonable we can look forward to a world set free from the fear of war," and from many other undesirable things.

Now that the tumult and the shouting have passed away and the event can be seen in its proper perspective, one aspect of the general election in Great Britain should therefore have given universal satisfaction, for newspapers of every shade of political opinion are united in representing the contest as having been carried out on a basis of reasonable discussion of practicable propositions. Mr. Ashmead-Bartlett in the Daily Telegraph has noted the willingness of large audiences to listen to detailed and rational expositions of intricate economic problems, and their suspicion of merely flashy speeches. The Saturday Review has also drawn attention to this phenomenon, and in one issue of The Times the place of honor in the correspondence columns was given to a letter remarking the same fact. This welcome rationalization of politics is no doubt chiefly due to the spread of education, but some of the credit for it may be justly ascribed to the radio, which, reaching men and women in the quiet of their own homes, has developed in them a taste for well-informed and logical addresses which the excited atmosphere of a public meeting would never have evoked.

Military Discipline of the Strings

ISCIPLINE, many years ago, began to require that the artists of the string department of an orchestra observe uniformity of motion. All the first violins were called upon to act as one person with regard to the use of the bow; and all second violins in their segment of the platform, and all the violas in theirs, were to do likewise, arms ascending and descending together. Also, those representing the under voice of the harmony, the violoncellos and the double basses, were required to follow out the idea, each player drawing back his right hand at the same moment and pushing it forward at the same.

This fancy, which was hesitatingly accepted at the end of the nineteenth century, has been generally approved in the twentieth. To describe the procedure roughly, the concertmaster goes over his part in a symphony and marks directions for up-bow and down-bow all through. He hands his work to an assistant, who copies the signs into the book of every member of the first violin section. And so on right down; the principal performer of the second violing, that of the violas, that of the violoncellos and that of the double basses penciling clamp-shaped and wedge-shaped symbols along the staves of his music, which are to be the guide for the whole platoon.

Now, though proved by time successful enough, the notion implies something military and calisthenic which seems a little beside the point. For whereas eight to sixteen performers may look better when acting as a group rather than as so many individuals, nevertheless the main question comes on how they sound. Shrewd observers of the doings of musical organizations have noted that of late the disciplinary rule is here and there relaxed. They have ted that it is more example, in the playing of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Perhaps they have merely mistaken the technical designs of the conductor; but there can be no denying that the Philadelphia method. whether it signifies an eased-up or a newly applied discipline, has had the desired effect. If violinist on one of the back desks is permitted now and then to produce his tone in his own instead of in the concertmaster's way, the result is clearly justified. For in charm and delicacy, in freedom and pliancy, the Philadelphia strings, by common acknowledgment, are scarcely sur-

"Scott of the Guardian," Dean of Journalism

By WILLIS J. ABOOT

DROBABLY the editorial writers who comment on the news, just cabled, of the retirement of Charles P. Scott, at the age of eighty-two, from the editorship of the Manchester Guardian, which he has filled for fiftyseven years, will call it "the end of an era." In a sense it is that. Mr. Scott is the last of the proprietor-editors of great newspapers-men whose ownership of the papers they conducted assured them liberty of thought and expression, and long continued service.

I think no other editor of an English newspaper today holds this impregnable position. Certainly none has enjoyed a tenure of office even remotely approaching that of Mr. Scott. In 1926 the Nation and Athenæum said. In London today there is only one daily newspaper still under the editor who was in charge at the beginning the war." Nor is there elsewhere in England, and cer-tainly not in the United States, an editor whose name is inextricably interwoven with the history and standards of his paper. Professional followers of international journalism may know of Gwynne, Dawson and Blumenfeld, but it is a safe wager that not one in one hundred readers of these lines will know what newspapers they edit. But "Scott of the Guardian" has been a phrase which for much more than a quarter of a century has been instantly understandable by newspaper men in all English-speaking

Two years ago I ran down from London to Manchester to see the man who so long stood as the ideal type of courageous, cultivated, clean-minded and enterprising journalist. It is no exaggeration to say that among wellinformed people in the United States the Manchester Guardian has long been accepted as a standard to which it is their wish that the better papers in America would more closely approach. Indeed one of the things which surprises such Americans, visiting England, is to find that admiration for the Guardian is but faintly, if at all, echoed by their English friends—particularly if the latter happen to be adherents of the Conservative Party. In the United States there is a tendency to think of the paper as an institution as solid as St. Paul's and as little ject to criticism as Magna Charta. The fact is overlooked that its editor had pluck enough to condemn and oppose in eyery way the Boer War. He encountered enormous losses in circulation and in business thereby, was threatened with personal violence, but at any rate escaped the governmental persecution which attended American expressions of somewhat similar views in 1917.

The Guardian, too, has been consistently Liberal, even in the present eclipse of the Liberal Party, and as a result neither pronounced Conservatives nor thorough-paced Laborites share in American admiration for it. And I may remark parenthetically that long experience in American polities and some observation of British polities conme that for pronounced and thorough-paced partisanship Americans are simply not in it with the English 1 1 1

A commissionaire, with war medals on his chest, and Lancashire accent which gave me my first inkling of the fact that in some parts of England our "mother tongue" is spoken in a form incomprehensible to American ears, bade me await the arrival of the editor. It was well on into the night, and as I sat in a book-lined room awaiting his arrival, I recalled some of the stories of his methods. Despite his eighty years, he then pedaled his bicycle to and from his office, except under particularly hostile weather conditions. He "put the paper to bed" in the still, small hours of the morning with all the zest of a young apprentice to the morning paper machine. He was editor in fact, available at every hour of the long working night, to determine vexed questions of policy, pression, of the treatment of news. He read the editorial roofs, and was himself a writer of strong "leaders." While was picturing him in my mind's eve he arrived in person

Rather under the average height but with square she ders, and a carriage which took advantage of every inch Mr. Scott then presented the alertness of manner and of ction common to men of half his years. He wears a beard not dissimilar to that of one of America's distinguished journalists-Cyrus H. K. Curtis of the Saturday Evening Post and other prosperous publications. It had not been long before this that I had interviewed Mr. Curtis, and I was impressed by the physical similarity of the two men-though the Lancashire man has an appearance of force and energy which nature had denied to the Philadelphian. But perhaps the lifelong habit of surveying "mankind from China to Peru" for the purposes of a daily newspaper enforces an alertness not entailed upon the practitioner of weekly journalism, which, despite his later ownership of two dailies, has been the lifelong interest of Mr. Curtis.

While we were talking I found a certain pleasure in pointing out to Mr. Scott that the positions of the Manchester Guardian and The Christian Science Monitor had certain points of resemblance. Neither is published in its nation's metropolis. Both come from provincial towns in which the metropolitan papers are delivered in the early morning-in Manchester the London papers may be read I today?

at breakfast. Confronted with such a situation the average provincial editor would endeavor to make an intense local paper in the belief that on national and international affairs the metropolitan press could easily outdo him. But both the Guardian and the Monitor have won, perthe news of the world, and making their foreign service

Maybe the nature of Manchester as a great exporting center led the editor of the Guardian to put that stress upon foreign news that has made it, perhaps, the best of all clearing houses for international information. At any rate he has been untiring in maintaining its foreign service. He remarked to me that a reputation for fair play in dealing with international affairs is invaluable. Because of it the Guardian is in constant receipt of news contributions from sources outside its regular staff, while the name of the paper is an open sesame to every chancellery. His correspondents are sent to the ends of the earth with blank checks for expenses, and letters of instruction almost equally blank—for they were merely told to tell the facts. His foreign representatives every now and then are immensely "bucked up" by getting hastily penciled notes from the chief, written, perhaps, at midnight, as he scans the proofs of the foreign news.

Despite his long-continued editorship and the intimate personal relations he maintains with every department, the Guardian is the most impersonal of papers. It may read as though written by a single hand from the arst page to the last, but, oddly enough, no one in England thinks of saying: "Have you read what Scott says?" but always "what the Guardian says." In the days of individual distinction in American journalism the nearest approach to this position was held by the New York World under the elder Pulitzer.

One of those old-fashioned editors who attribute almost human qualities to the paper they conduct, Mr. Scott would be incapable of bartering the slightest share of the Guardian's independence for profit. Time and again when the alternative was presented he has stood for his ideals, only to find, as every journalist under such conditions would find, that the profit came in time and unimpaired. "Character, honesty, cleanness, courage, fairness, a sense of duty to the reader and the community" are the quali-ties which he holds should attach to a newspaper. He believes in the single editorial direction—as would seem believes in the single editorial direction—as would seem natural in one who has wielded it for fifty-seven years—and deprecates the passage of the ownership of newspapers into purely financial and often nonresident hands. The "newspaper chain," which now is rapidly transforming American journalism, has been developed to even a greater degree in England. Against it he has spoken vigorously, both orally and through his paper, insisting that newspapers should not be divorced from the interests of the town in which they are published, nor should their ownership be made the stake in stock—market struggles.

The entire consistency the unvarying hermony of all.

The entire consistency, the unvarying harmony of all parts of the Guardian—news, editorial and business policy The entire consistency, the unvarying harmony of all parts of the Guardian—news, editorial and business policy—must impress its regular readers. This results from the ceaseless vigilance maintained by the editor, his unquestioned authority and his long reign of office. Every correspondent, every leader writer knows precisely the policy of the paper and takes no liberties with it. I have been impressed—to speak parenthetically—by the fact that Guardian men with whom I have talked and articles which I have read refer gently, but unmistakably, to the firmness, not unaccentuated by temper, with which Mr. Scott enforces his opinions upon his staff. He has always, so they say, been accessible and ready to listen to opposing views, but his decisions have been law. Given more than fifty years of such a rule, and the journalistic machine created by it should function smoothly from Manchester to Moscow or Montevideo. to Moscow or Montevideo.

Some years ago, on the occasion of his completion of fifty years of service, Mr. Scott in a formal discussion of newspaper methods and ethics laid down this fundamental

A newspaper is of necessity something of a monopoly, and its first duty is to shun the temptations of a monopoly. Its primary office is the gathering of news. At the peril of its soul it must see that the supply is not tainted. Neither in what it gives nor in what it does not give, nor in the mode of presentation, must the unclouded face of truth suffer wrong. Comment is free, but facts are sacred.

Journalists, particularly in the United States, will wonder whether the Guardian type, so widely acclaimed, is to persist in the newspaper world. The selection of the important news of the day, the rigid rejection of trivialities and vulgarities, dignified editorial comment written in the best English, unvarying fairness to opponents, a business policy which yields not one inch to unworthy financial or commercial pressure, yet serves the community and its own supporters loyally and well, have been the bases of the Manchester Guardian's great prosperity and influence. Are they rules sufficiently insisted upon in the press of

From the World's Great Capitals—Moscow

Soviet Russia is now anxious to develop "the invisible item of export"—it wants foreign tourists. By a decision of the Council of Labor and Defense a new organization "The Intourist" (Foreign Tourist) has been formed. It aims to encourage foreign tourists to come and spend some time in Russia and to show the advantages to people who go to Japan and China of traveling by way of European Russia and Siberia.

Russia can claim to have many of the features which draw tourists: variety and beauty of nature, peculiarity and picturesqueness of the life and customs of the innu merable minor nationalities which inhabit it, the newness of its political and social structure. The railroad rates are lower than abroad and the coupes comfortable. The great drawback in the entire plan is the lack of good, moderately priced hotels. The smallest and cheapest room in an average hotel in Moscow or in any large Russian city costs about $3 a day. Food prices are also high.

The Intourist is aware of these difficulties and plans to build in Moscow, Leningrad, Sevastopol and Batum, hotels that will better meet the average need. The society, also plans to open branches in various European centers and in America for the purpose of facilitating and simplifying consular and visa difficulties and for giving the necessary information to prospective tourists. The "Voks," or Society for Cultural Relations with Foreign Countries, will co-operate with the Intourist in making the trips in Soviet Russia pleasant, instructive and attractive.

The Moscow trade unions, the city art department, the Moscow branch of the League of Communist Youth, and the management of the "Park of Culture and Recreation," are arranging a grandiose musical festival of the Moscow trade unions in which over 7000 people, trade-union members, will participate. Folk songs, revolutionary, modern, and classical music, together with folk dancing, form the program. The musical circles of the various workers' clubs will give joint recitals. There will be a choir of 2500 people, a brass orchestra of 2000 people, a balalaika orchestra of 500, a symphony orchestra of 200, etc. The festivities will begin at noon and will last till late in the evening.

The Park of Culture and Recreation is one of the largest in Moscow and was opened last year. One of its distinctly new features is that no alcoholic drinks are Comrade Unshlicht, Assistant War Commissar, has recently announced that in August an exceptionally diffi-cult flight will be made from Moscow to New York via the Pacific Ocean. The crossing will be undertaken on the airplane The Land of Soviets, built in Russia. The pilots will be Messrs. Shestakov (who in 1927 flew from Moscow to Tokyo and back) and Boloto. The route, extending over 20,000 kilometers, lies over Siberia, the Pacific, Seattle, San Francisco, Chicago and New York. They hope to cross the Pacific at the Aleutian Islands, an achievement in which, it seems, no one before has been successful. American fliers tried to cross at that point, but failed, while the English brothers Douglas only partially succeeded. There will be many difficulties to overcome, but the Soviet fliers are most enthusiastic about the prospect and are confident of success.

Offensive Advertising Suggestions

News comments on this matter, stating that re-cently these same billboards displayed go-to-church ad-vertising, the billboard company advising the ministers of the churches what they were doing, thus gaining their commendation and sympathy, perhaps, for the campaign.

Very soon thereafter some of the suggestive cigarette advertising, showing young boys and girls smilingly smoking the little pills, appeared. This has aroused the mothers and fathers of the community, and bodes no good for advertisers. The moral pointed out by the Hemet paper is that hillboard advertisers should remember what happened to brewers, distillers and saloon-keepers when they

The same suggestion might be extended to newspaper and magazine advertising. It is not only on billboards that the imaginations of artists are running riot with offensive suggestions in advertising.—The Inland Printer.

Utilizing the Ex-Prisoner

THE proposal to name Henry L. Brock, a former prisoner I in the Eastern Penitentiary of Pennsylvania, to the Board of County Prison Inspectors for Philadelphia County is not only novel but appears highly sensible. Brock was sent to prison as a result of a fatal automobile accident, the general belief at the time having been that he pleaded guilty to various indictments in order to shield somebody else. He was in no sense a criminal type. He had been a banker and a prominent man. During the three had been a banker and a prominent man. During the three years that he spent in prison before he was pardoned he became active in helping those about him to learn trades and to become honest. Since he has been out he has kept up this work and is said to have accomplished a great deal. That he would be an uncommonly useful member of the board is obvious.
